

Transcript: “Careers at the OIG: Mission Support Specialist” June 2017

Jasmine Moore: My name is Jasmine Moore, and I am a Human Resources Specialist.

Torrence Simon: My name is Torrence Simon, and I’m the Supervisory Financial Management Analyst.

David Rudd: I’m Dave Rudd, Director of Training and Development.

Simon: I believe mission support is the backbone of our agency.

Rudd: We really provide the foundation for our entire organization in human resources, in training, in facilities.

Moore: I would consider myself a people person, so I really enjoy just interacting with the employees here and just trying to help them in any way possible.

Simon: The OIG is a smaller agency, so our financial management analysts have to wear multiple hats.

Moore: Some people may think that HR specialists just have one role or task, but here at the OIG, we handle many different functions.

Simon: We’re not paper pushers. A lot of analytical work does go into what we do and why we do what we do.

Rudd: And when I come into work, I say ‘What can I do today to help the employees improve their knowledge, skills, and abilities?’

Moore: I support our employees here at the OIG by being a problem solver.

Simon: We are the ultimate problem solvers.

Rudd: It’s incredibly fulfilling to work with engaged employees. As part of my mission in mission support is to be able to facilitate that.

Moore: One thing that I take away from being in mission support would be that it’s very rewarding and fulfilling.

Moore: To learn more about opportunities here at the Office of the Inspector General, visit our website, oig.justice.gov.