

Transcript: “Careers at the OIG: Program Analyst, Evaluation and Inspections Division”
June 2017

My name is Kristopher Brash Dixon, and I am a Program Analyst. I’ve been at the OIG now for five years. I had the opportunity to work at the OIG as an intern while I was still in graduate school. I was excited about the work; the mission of the OIG captivated me, and so I wanted to start my career here. When I completed my Masters degree, I converted to a Program Analyst position. The best part of being a Program Analyst, it’s more than just researching topics and writing reports. We have an opportunity to meet with Department officials and have an impact in Department programs. To me it’s clear that the OIG cares about the development of its employees. I’ve been afforded many opportunities to have leadership roles. These opportunities show that the OIG is willing to invest in its employees, no matter what stage of their career they’re in.

To learn more about our opportunities at the Office of the Inspector General, please visit our website, oig.justice.gov.